Steelheads come home

Trout transplanted to Tilden terrain

By Alyce Miller

One Saturday morning last month, while most of the East Bay was still asleep under its blanket of fog, a unique ecological effort was about to take place in Tilden Park.

Members of the Grizzly Peak Fly Fishers were convening in the gray forest mists of Redwood Park with members of the Department of Fish and Game, trucks, oxygenated containers, and unbridled enthusiasm. These fishermen were on a fishing expedition of another kind.

They were after steelhead trout, but not with rods and reels. Their aim was to restore natural balance to Wildcat Canyon Creek running through Tilden Park. Their method was to transfer by hand some of the trout, which are native to Redwood Park, to various pools in the Tilden stream.

To reduce trauma to fish, electroshock was administered to momentarily stun the fish for safe removal.

The project was conceived by Jerome Frisk, conservation chairman of Grizzly Peak Fly Fishers, and launched by John Emig of the Department of Fish and Game.

Canyon Creek was around the turn of the century. Encroachment, development and carelessness were blamed for disrupting the life cycle of the trout. Frisk hopes to change all that.

By mid-morning, the first batch of fish arrived at Tilden Park. About 30 people joined Frisk inside the Nature Center for an explanation of procedures. They had come to plant the fish. They were given instructions not to dump the fish but to allow them to swim out of the buckets into the stream.

"This is the first time I know of anything like this being done in an urban stream," said park naturalist Tim Gordon. "We are placing an organism in a habitat that won't require managing. Ten or 15 years from now you can come and see real, honest-to-goodness trout. Before, nobody was able to see this watershed as a whole."

Maps helped to determine the best locations for placing the trout. Only finger-sized, the fish need time to grow in this rippling creek that offers an optimum environment.

Under clearing skies with a crisp autumn bite, the first truckload of trout headed to the Botanical Gardens with Gordon assisting. Three oxygenated holding tanks containing about 50 trout sloshed a little water here and there as the pickup wended over uneven terrain closer to the creek's edge.

"These little guys are being handled with kid gloves all the way," Frisk explained.

Gordon led the group down the embankment to the stream where buckets were carefully dipped into the water and the fish were released.

"It's great to see the creek alive again," someone said.

This is the beginning of what Frisk hopes will be a wave of environmental education programs. Non-experts can learn to perform simple tests and help monitor the streams, he noted. The transfer may encourage people to explore a natural environment which, after almost a century, is again doing what it is supposed to do, he said.

Some 600 fish were transferred from Redwood and released in Tilden. Of those, 400 released below Lake Anza will have access to the ocean so they can continue their life cycle as they once did.

Exhausted after a hard day's work, Frisk concluded that the operation had been a success.

"Everybody was wonderful," he said. "I think it's important that people see that the park people, the fish and game people and the environmentalists can all work together."

The future of the stream now depends on naturalists Tim Gordon and Steve Abbors, who will keep track of the trout and their environment.

Said Frisk, "This is not an end, but a beginning."

Education reform:

RUSD teachers tell where state went wrong

By BARBARA ERICKSON

If legislators had asked local teachers how to draft an education bill, they would have added some reforms, subtracted others and multiplied the dollars in the new law passed this summer.

Three Richmond Unified teachers, from kindergarten through the high school level, agree that the big need is more money for classroom educators. But they don't like the mentor teacher plan — even though it offers bonuses for a few — and they say some reforms are unfair while others will make little difference.

"My pet peeve," said Kennedy forensics coach David Danksy, "is that I did not take a vow of poverty when I decided to become a teacher." Danksy said he remains in the schools only because he has a business with 200 employees to supplement his income.

Beginning teachers in Richmond Unified make $13,032 a year, and the top salary is $25,236.

Portola Junior High history teacher Jerry Brooks said a provision which sets minimum salary at $18,000 a year still "doesn't really address the issue." The wages are "still not really competitive," he said, and the increase is built in over three years.

Hercules kindergarten teacher Mary Schuette said of the increase, "That's great and right, but the problem is there is not much difference between $18,000 and $25,000 for someone who's been in this district 30 years."

The minimum salary is one of the few reforms which remained in SB 813, this summer's education bill, after Gov. George Deukmejian vetoed a heavy chunk of the money. The governor removed money for almost everything beyond this year's program. As a result, educators are unsure about starting on the reforms approved by the Senate and Assembly this summer. Without the money, most of them will never go into effect.

Though teachers lament the lack of hard money for the changes, they tend to support the reforms. At least, they say, it shows a real concern for education.

"For the first time in a long time someone out there is listening to our cries for help," said Danksy. "There is some hope, and that's the nicest thing."

Even so, the three Richmond Unified teachers agreed that the mentor teacher program, which would give outstanding teachers a $4,000 bonus to work with beginning teachers, is badly conceived.

The plan would select five percent of the state's teachers to take part in the program, and that, the teachers say, is too few.

"We ought to look carefully at any kind of artificial limit," Brooks said.

And Schuette said, "To assume that only five percent of the teachers are worth it, what does that say about the rest?"

Danksy said the plan is "divisive" because "there are more people deserving than there are dollars to be divided. It's a PR move, and it doesn't solve any problems."

But while they were unanimous in supporting additional funds, $36 million for textbooks and a call for renewing summer school, the three teachers gave qualified support to other reforms.

Yes, they said, the state should raise graduation standards, but these should not be too rigid.

All of the teachers supported programs which would lead to different types of high school diplomas — vocational, academic, fine arts or some similar division.

Some of the reforms are aimed at making it easier for districts to fire or "counsel out" incompetent teachers, but these, local teachers say, are not necessary.

On the issue of lengthening the school year, however, they did not agree.

Schuette and Brooks were unsure about the longer year. "After a certain amount of days," she said, students act as if "school is out whether you're here or not."

But Danksy favored stretching the year beyond the 180 days suggested in the bill. With more days to teach, he said, "I would be able to cover more ground and with more depth."

Danksy also disagreed with the others on a plan to let districts hire teachers who have bachelors' degrees but no graduate work in education.

Brooks said the proposal "undercuts the credentialing system. If we don't need the system we ought to look at it rather than do this back door kind of thing."

But Danksy said, "The education courses have little to do with whatever skills you have in the classroom. We need bright people who care about students. Their attitude toward young people is the most crucial element."

The teachers also threw out some suggestions for changes that the Legislature ignored. Class size, they said, is a crucial factor in good teaching, but it is not included in the new bill.

"To me that is the one reform (lowering class size) within the school that is going to make the difference," Schuette said.

Danksy said he would like to see funds to let English teachers hire readers, thus encouraging more writing assignments. He also suggested paying for "one person at each school whose sole job would be to help teachers improve their performance in the classroom." Administrators are too tied up in paperwork, he said.

In general, Brooks said, "We need to remember that this is the beginning of reform, and we shouldn't look at quick answers. The money we got this year doesn't even make up for what is lost."

But still, Danksy said, "There is some money behind the rhetoric for the first time in a long time. People care again. It's nice."

County mulls new hospital

Contra Costa Supervisors hired a consultant Tuesday, Oct. 11, to help determine whether a new county hospital should be built, and, if so, where.

For an amount not to exceed $70,000, Arthur Andersen and Company will estimate construction and operating costs, what type and how many patients the new facility will have, and what income can be expected.

The firm will analyze 25 ways to build and run the facility and provide the county with a computer program able to work out most scenarios, should they be necessary, said Mel Wingett, county administrator.

Located in downtown Martinez, the County Hospital was constructed piecemeal down through the decades, has corridors open to the elements and is considered obsolete. The hospital treats many poor patients, a good portion of them from the West County.

The board of supervisors recently voted to build a new hospital, but funding has yet to be worked out.

Gauchos spike Oilers

By DALE COLEY

EL CERRITO — While the boys waited to begin their Richmond-Berkeley Athletic League football season, the girls got an early jump as RBAL teams launched their 1983 volleyball campaign.

Berkeley's Yellowjackets powered to a 15-7, 15-10 victory over Kennedy's Eagles, while Steve Adachi's El Cerrito Gauchos trounced Sue Kahn's young and inexperienced Richmond Oilers 15-2, 15-4.

El Cerrito used a good team effort and consistent communication to overpower Kahn's younger Oilers, who were their own worst enemies. "We only have two returning players, so they're not only new to the game, they're new to each other, which was apparent," said Kahn.

Despite Richmond's lopsided loss, Kahn was not disappointed in the least. "I've seen this team all year and we're consistently beginning to look better," said Kahn.

"I was pleased the girls were as organized as they were, especially this early in the season," said Kahn.

On the other side of the coin, Adachi had mixed emotions after his team's 1-0 league start. "It was hard to tell how good we played," he added.

Adachi's team didn't show up for a practice session in long rallies and Richmond was going to learn that in a hurry, while experiencing a bad case of first-league-game jitters. El Cerrito veterans Robin Pree and Cynthia Jackson were taking turns spiking the Gauchos to a commanding 15-2 first-game win.

Only two serving points by Richmond's Melanie Rubin prevented a shutout in game one.

In the second game, the 4-10 Rubin served Richmond to a 3-0 lead as El Cerrito had a temporary problem figuring out how to return the senior's consistently accurate serve.

After a lack of communication cost the Oilers possession, E.C. went on to tally 11 unanswered points, keyed by Jackson who served up nine straight points.

Surrounded by youth and inexperience, only the play of seniors Lydia Lewis and Rubin prevented El Cerrito from wrapping up the match in less time than the 43 minutes it did take them. "I'm a little disappointed. I expected us to put up a little better showing than we did, but I'm sure with this being the first league game for a lot of our players, they were nervous," said Lewis.

Rubin agreed with Lewis that the younger Oilers were extremely nervous. "They were nervous all right, but that's all right because we're going to win some games this year and who knows, we'll probably beat them (E.C.) next time," said Rubin.

AARP survey asks who takes Medicare

Finding out which Alameda and Contra Costa physicians accept Medicare is one of the goals of a survey launched Oct. 2 by the Health Advocacy Services project of the American Association of Retired Persons.

The project, which is supported by the Gray Panthers and other organizations for older persons in Alameda and Contra Costa counties, will mail questionnaires to 1,400 physicians practicing in the two counties, according to Herbert Williams, project chairman and a member of the Planning, Development and Review Committee of the Alameda-Contra Costa Health Systems Agency.

The questionnaire asks whether the physicians accept Medicare assignments, and if the physician accepts new Medicare patients. It also asks for suggestions on how to make Medicare assignment "more widely accepted" among physicians.

Under present Medicare law, doctors are not required to accept assignment. Those who do not accept Medicare assignment have no restrictions on their fees.

"In recent years," Williams said, "there has been a growing discrepancy between the Medicare allowable charge and the physician's actual fees. This has been a matter of concern to the Medicare beneficiary."

The AARP volunteers will follow up the questionnaire with telephone calls to record responses.

Once the survey is completed in December, the data will be made available to the over-65 population.

The survey in the East Bay is part of a national AARP effort to help contain the skyrocketing cost of health care.

Other organizations that have endorsed the survey are the Contra Costa Advisory Council on Aging and the Alameda County Department of Aging.

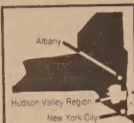

The Alameda County Department of Aging has donated office space at 1755 Broadway in Oakland for the AARP Medicare Assignment Survey. For further inquiries, telephone 874-7233.

Arms boat sails Blockade fails at Port Chicago

PORT CHICAGO (UPI) — A freighter said to be carrying munitions to El Salvador from the Concord Naval Weapons Station left its San Pablo Bay port without incident despite the announced intent of a group of anti-nuclear arms protesters to blockade the vessel.

The Elizabeth Lykes sailed from Port Chicago under Coast Guard escort Thursday. About 40 anti-nuclear arms demonstrators had hoped to stop the departure, but Petty Officer Wayne Winner of the Coast Guard said the ship sailed into San Francisco Bay without incident.

"There were only a couple sailboats and small boats in the area," he said. "The only action our boat took was to tell them to move away from the ship over the loudspeaker."

David DeLeeuw, a spokesman for the Port Chicago Coalition, said his group had planned a larger protest but was caught by surprise by the ship's departure time.

"We actually thought the boat was to leave later tonight," he said. "When we found out it was leaving around 6 p.m. we had to hastily get people together to get out there."

DeLeeuw said the boat was carrying munitions. A spokesman at the Naval Weapons Station would not comment on the ship's cargo.

Lifeline installed

Home-to-hospital emergency link

Lifeline, a personal emergency response system that provides a direct electronic link between a patient at home and hospital emergency room, is now in operation at Doctors Hospital of Pinole.

Sponsored by Volunteers of Doctors Hospital, Lifeline is especially helpful to elderly or disabled persons living alone, and the cost is minimal. Via the telephone system, a subscribing patient can just press a "help" button on a home or remote control unit and the call is transmitted to the Lifeline Response Center maintained at Doctors Hospital emergency room where round-the-clock personnel have a client's medical summary on file.

Emergency staff attempt to call the subscriber for details of the problem. If the patient can answer the phone, arrangements are made for appropriate treatment or ambulance.

If the subscriber is unable to reach or answer the phone, a series of pre-selected responders (relatives, friends, or neighbors) are called until one is found to respond to the situation.

If no responder can be reached, the local police or fire department may be asked to check out the situation. The press of another button signals the hospital that help has arrived and a final call from emergency yields the needed information.

Lifeline is now in place in over 650 hospitals across the country. In the Bay Area, Doctors Hospital and Merritt in Oakland are the first facilities to offer the service which was designed and developed by Dr. Andrew S. Digner of Boston University.

In addition to the original contribution of the Base Response Center costing $7,000 at Doctors Hospital and 24 home units at $500 each donated by Volunteer of Doctors Hospital, two units have been donated by El Sobrante Rotary Club, one by a private donor, and one purchased from the income generated by the low fee required of each subscriber.

Subscribers are asked to donate $10 a month. All of the Volunteer-sponsored home units have been installed in homes from Albany and El Cerrito to Hercules and Pacheco. There is a current waiting list of six potential subscribers.

Doctors Hospital has designated October as Lifeline Month. Planned are activities for subscribers and responders, information and fund-raising campaigns to support and expand the system by 20-25 units. Fund-raising got off to a good start when the Volunteers themselves voted at their September meeting to contribute $4,300 to the program.

Lifeline subscribers can be persons with handicaps and chronic disabilities, who are recently widowed or left alone for long periods of time; have cancer, arthritis, speech impairments, or such problems as cardiovascular, gastro-intestinal, metabolic, neurological, respiratory or visual disorders.

Lifeline personnel at the hospital are Norma Badger, RN, social services and Lifeline coordinator; Mary Jo Durham, R.N., discharge planning; Helga Kay Kissell, Volunteers Lifeline chairperson; and Leo T. Kissell, Volunteers installer and instructor.

The event will be Friday, Nov. 4, at the El Cerrito Community Center, 7007 Moers Lane, from 8 a.m. until midnight.

Games such as blackjack, roulette, the wheel of fortune, and craps will be available and prizes will be awarded to high scoring participants.
